

AJSI

Information about contributors		117-118
'Pushing buttons': an evaluation of the effect of Aboriginal income management on commercial gambling expenditure	David Lamb and Martin Young	119-140
Naming and claiming workplace sexual harassment in Australia	Sara Charlesworth, Paula McDonald and Somali Cerise	141-161
Give and take in major gift relationships	Katie McDonald, Wendy Scaife and Susan Smyllie	163-182
'Problematising' Australian policy representations in responses to the physical health of people with mental health disorders	Julie Henderson and Jeffrey Fuller	183-203
Exploring the role of fringe lenders in the lives of Queenslanders	Lynda Shevellar and Gregory Marston	205-222
Notes for contributors		223-227

Information about contributors

Somali Cerise managed the 2008 Sexual Harassment Prevalence Survey for the Australian Human Rights Commission. Since 2009 she has been in the United Kingdom where she has been undertaking an MSc in Gender, Development and Globalisation at the London School of Economics and working with Amnesty and the End Violence Against Women Coalition.

Sara Charlesworth is Principal Research Fellow at the Centre for Work + Life at the University of South Australia. Her research centres on gender equality in employment at the labour market, industry and organisational levels, including a focus on various dimensions of sex discrimination, job quality or decent work and work/life reconciliation.

Jeffrey Fuller is the Professor of Nursing (Primary Health Care) at Flinders University. He is a mental health and community health nurse with postgraduate qualifications in public health. He has worked for 27 years in multidisciplinary public health settings, including as a manager in community health and for the last 17 years in university posts, largely in rural health.

Julie Henderson is a Research Fellow (Primary Health Care) in the School of Nursing & Midwifery at Flinders University. She is a health sociologist currently working in three areas: mental health; social networks and chronic disease self-management; and trust in food regulation.

David S. Lamb is a Senior GIS Analyst at Anderson Consulting Engineers, Inc. He has over 10 years experience as a geographer and GIS analyst. His research interests include social science and policy applications of GIS.

Greg Marston is Professor of Social Policy in the School of Public Health and Social Work at the Queensland University of Technology. His research interests include unemployment and income security, social class and alternatives to workfare. He has a practice background in youth homelessness and social policy development and has a longstanding interest in policy activism.

Katie McDonald holds a Bachelor of Social Science (Hons I) in development studies. She is particularly interested in development practice, nonprofit organisations, governance and capacity building. Katie has a professional background in strategic policy and research, and has worked with nonprofit organisations in Australia, Bangladesh, Cambodia and Fiji.

Paula McDonald is Associate Professor in the School of Management at the Queensland University of Technology. Her research, which spans areas including discrimination and harassment, work-life boundaries and young people's pathways, aims to promote social justice in employment.

Wendy Scaife is Senior Research Fellow at the Australian Centre for Philanthropy and Nonprofit Studies at the Queensland University of Technology. She researches fundraising, philanthropy and nonprofit marketing and was part of the team in the Giving Australia research. Dr Scaife was previously CEO/ National Deputy CEO of a health nonprofit.

Lynda Shevellar is a Lecturer in the School of Social Work and Human Services at the University of Queensland. Her research interests include community development practice, education and training. Lynda's co-edited book Learning and Mobilising for Community Development: A Radical Tradition of Community Based Education and Training will be published by Ashgate in 2012.

Susan Smyllie works at the Australian Centre for Philanthropy and Nonprofit Studies at the Queensland University of Technology. Sue is an experienced qualitative and action research practitioner. Her career has included managing a multimillion dollar grants program for rural and remote areas, policy development for the public sector and community development work.

Martin Young is a Senior Lecturer within the Centre for Gambling Education and Research (CGER), at Southern Cross University. Prior to taking up this position in March 2011, he led the Northern Territory gambling research program. His current interests include spatial and behavioural approaches to gambling management in remote areas, viewed through the theoretical lenses of critical and radical geography.