

AJSI

Information about authors		343-345
Life after work: older Australians' experiences of early exit from the workforce	Catherine Mackenzie, Dominic Keuskamp, Anna Ziersch and Fran Baum	347-369
Yarning about gambling in Indigenous communities: an Aboriginal and Islander Mental Health Initiative	Tricia Nagel, Rachael Hinton, Valerie Thompson and Neil Spencer	371-389
Health and community services for trafficked women: an exploratory study of policy and practice	Toni Schofield, Julie Hepworth, Mairwen Jones and Eugene Schofield	391-410
Positive and negative impacts of job loss on family life: the perceptions of Australian car workers	Gwyn Jolley, Lareen Newman, Anna Ziersch and Fran Baum	411-433
A new form of energy poverty is the hallmark of liberalised electricity sectors	Lynne Chester and Alan Morris	435-459
Notes for contributors		461-465

Information about authors

Fran Baum is Director of the Southgate Institute for Health Society and Equity and the South Australian Community Health Research Unit at Flinders University. She served as a Commissioner on the World Health Organisation Commission on the Social Determinants of Health (2005-08) and in 2008 was awarded an Australian Research Council Federation Fellowship to lead a program of research to improve theory and policies addressing social determinants of health inequities and social exclusion. Fran is a lead investigator on the Australian National Health and Medical Research Council funded project exploring ‘Changing patterns of work: impacts on physical and mental health and mediating role of resiliency and social capital’.

Lynne Chester researches and teaches in the Department of Political Economy at the University of Sydney. Her research focuses on the environment, energy affordability, electricity generation capacity, electricity and carbon derivatives, and the regulation of energy markets.

Julie Hepworth is Associate Professor in the Faculty of Health Sciences at the University of Queensland, and a health psychologist. Her research includes gender and health, primary health care, chronic disease, young people’s health, especially weight management and alcohol use, and qualitative methodology.

Rachael Hinton is an Honorary Fellow of Menzies School of Health Research. From 2011 to 2012 she was a Senior Research Officer with the Australian Integrated Mental health initiative (AIMhi) program at Menzies School of Health Research.

Gwyn Jolley is a Senior Research Officer at the SA Community Health Research Unit and Southgate Institute for Health Society and Equity. Gwyn has undertaken numerous evaluations of health promotion initiatives and is co-Chief Investigator on a project using innovative approaches to evaluate comprehensive primary health care in local communities.

Lareen Ann Newman is a Senior Research Fellow at the Southgate Institute for Health Society and Equity. Lareen researches social health issues, taking a critical public health perspective. She led a publication on the views of Mitsubishi workers’ children about the impact of parental redundancy, and is co-Chief-Investigator on a project investigating the family’s role in older Greek migrants’ access to services.

Mairwen Jones is a Senior Lecturer in the Discipline of Behavioural and Social Sciences in Health at the University of Sydney. She is also a psychologist and Head of The University of Sydney Anxiety Disorders Clinic. Her primary research interest involves the nature, origin and management of anxiety.

Dominic Keuskamp is a Research Fellow in the Southgate Institute for Health, Society and Equity at Flinders University. He is Project Manager for the qualitative component of the Australian National Health and Medical Research Council funded project exploring 'Changing patterns of work: impacts on physical and mental health and mediating role of resiliency and social capital'.

Catherine Mackenzie is employed in the Southgate Institute for Health, Society and Equity at Flinders University. She is currently working as a research associate on the Australian National Health and Medical Research Council funded project exploring 'Changing patterns of work: impacts on physical and mental health and mediating role of resiliency and social capital'.

Alan Morris is a Senior Lecturer at the School of Social Sciences and International Studies at the University of New South Wales. He has undertaken research on a range of urban and social policy issues, and is currently researching the impact of different housing tenures and housing policy on the life circumstances of older people.

Tricia Nagel is a consultant psychiatrist and Associate Professor at Menzies School of Health Research where she leads the Healing and Resilience Division, and the Australian Integrated Mental health initiative (AIMhi) research and training program.

Eugene Schofield is a practising lawyer in the field of human rights and criminal law in the Northern Territory of Australia.

Toni Schofield is Associate Professor in the Discipline of Behavioural and Social Sciences in Health at the Faculty of Health Sciences at the University of Sydney. Dr Schofield is a researcher in sociology and public policy. Her main international research contributions have been in women's and men's health, gender and health, and workplace health. She is currently leading an ARC funded study of alcohol use and harm minimisation among Australian university students.

Neil Spencer is a trained general nurse and registered psychiatric nurse who has worked in various mental health positions in the Northern Territory, primarily with the NT Top End Mental Health Service. Neil has worked with the Australian Integrated Mental health initiative (AIMhi) project for seven years assisting with data collection and analysis.

Valerie Thompson is an Aboriginal Research Officer who has worked with the Australian Integrated Mental health initiative (AIMhi) project at Menzies School of Health Research for seven years as trainer, educator and researcher.

Anna Ziersch is a Senior Research Fellow at the Southgate Institute for Health, Society and Equity, working in the area of health equity. One of her areas of research focus is the connections between work and health, and she is currently a lead investigator on an Australian National Health and Medical Research Council project exploring the links between forms of employment and health.