

AJSI

Information about authors		151-152
Integrated services in Australian early childhood education and care: what can we learn from our past?	Sandie Wong and Frances Press	153-173
Teenagers' household and caring work: the relevance of 'secondary activities' in Australian time use surveys	Pavla Miller and Justin Bowd	175-201
Job satisfaction and 'welfare-to-work': is any job a good job for Australian single mothers?	Kay Cook and Andrew Noblet	203-219
Choosing intercountry adoption: an Australian study of the motivations and attitudes of intending and recent adoptive parents	Alexandra Young	221-241
Integrating service delivery in a regional homelessness service system	Kate Neale, Jeremy Buultjens and Trish Evans	243-261
Notes for contributors		263-267

Information about authors

Justin Bowd is a research officer at the Australian Education Union, and associate researcher in the School of Global, Urban and Social Studies at RMIT. He has written on the effects of employment and regional factors on early school leaving in Victoria, and conducted statistical analyses of several different aspects of time use and domestic division of labour in Australia.

Jeremy Buultjens is Associate Professor in the School of Business at Southern Cross University. He is also the Managing Editor of the Journal of Economic and Social Policy. He has taught in a number of units ranging from economics and industrial relations through to tourism planning and Indigenous tourism. Jeremy's research interests include Indigenous entrepreneurship, regional development and employment relations.

Kay Cook is a Vice-Chancellor's Senior Research Fellow in the Centre for Applied Social Research at RMIT University. Her work explores how new and developing social policies, such as welfare-to-work, child support and child care policies, transform relationships between the state, individuals and families.

Trish Evans has worked for 20 years in housing and homelessness policy development, project management, service delivery and research in both the public and not-for-profit sectors and is currently Manager of Development and Innovation at the Northern Rivers Social Development Council. She is a member of the Board of Shelter NSW and the NSW Government's Specialist Homelessness Services Review Panel of Experts and Regional Planning Working Group. Trish was a co-researcher for the 2011 Service Integration in a Regional Homelessness Service System research project.

Pavla Miller is Professor of Historical Sociology at RMIT University in Melbourne. Her publications include Long Division: State Schooling in South Australian Society (Wakefield, 1986) and Transformations of Patriarchy in the West, 1500-1900 (Indiana University Press, 1998). She has also written on masters and servants legislation, fertility rates and ethnicity, and time use and domestic division of labour.

Kate Neale is a researcher within the Centre for Children and Young People, at Southern Cross University. With a background in marketing and law, Kate's research interests include children as ethical consumers in both present and future markets and the application of social marketing to social issues. Kate was co-researcher for the 2011 Service Integration in a Regional Homelessness Service System research project.

Andrew Noblet is a Professor in Organisational Behaviour at Deakin Graduate School of Business, Deakin University. Andrew's research interests are in the areas of occupational stress, employee wellbeing, organisational justice, job design theory and employee performance.

Frances Press researches and teaches in early childhood education at Charles Sturt University. Her research has a particular focus on the impact of policy on children's and families experiences of early childhood education and care.

Sandie Wong is a Research Fellow at the Research Institute for Professional Practice, Learning and Education at Charles Sturt University. Her current research examines integrated early childhood services, collaborative practices and inter-professional working relationships. She has an on-going interest in exploring contemporary issues through historical methods.

Alexandra Young is a Research Manager of an ARC Linkage project at the University of Sydney. Her research interests include community development, ageing, foster care and adoption.