

AJSI

Information about authors		147-149
An alternative measure of social wellbeing: analysing the key conceptual and statistical components of quality of life	Paul Boreham, Jenny Povey and Wojtek Tomaszewski	151-172
The social and economic impacts of immigration detention facilities: a South Australian case study	Danielle Every, Steve Whetton, Sophia Rainbird, Suraya Abdul Halim, Nicholas Procter, Bianca Sebben and Kirrilly Thompson	173-196
Are baby-boomers healthy enough to keep working? Health as a mediator of extended labour force participation	Jennifer Buckley, Lisel O'Dwyer, Graeme Tucker, Robert Adams, Gary Wittert and Graeme Hugo	197-221
Framing microfinance in Australia – gender neutral or gender blind?	Susan Goodwin and Archana Preeti Voola	223-239
Family separation and the impacts on refugee settlement in Australia	Brooke Wilmsen	241-262
Notes for contributors		263-267

Information about authors

Suraya Abdul Halim is a research economist at the SA Centre for Economic Studies. At the Centre, her research is centred on applied quantitative analyses, including program evaluations, macroeconomic monitoring and applied econometric modelling analyses on public policy and social issues.

Robert Adams is the Director of the Health Observatory at the University of Adelaide's Queen Elizabeth Hospital Campus. His research centres on population health comparisons of conditions including asthma, diabetes, metabolic syndrome, cardiovascular disease and health literacy.

Paul Boreham is an Emeritus Professor in the Institute for Social Science Research at the University of Queensland. He was formerly Director of the University of Queensland Social Research Centre and Head of the School of Political Science and International Studies. He has published and researched in the fields of employment and labour market analysis, policy studies, and social and economic change.

Jennifer Buckley is a Visiting Research Fellow in the Australian Population and Migration Research Centre, University of Adelaide, with research experience using both quantitative and qualitative methods in the fields of health, sociology and demography. Her research interests include baby boomers, the impact of social change on lifestyle and health, and the relationships between health and workforce participation.

Danielle Every is Director of the People, Place and Migration Unit at the Appleton Institute at CQUniversity in Adelaide. She is a social psychologist specialising in research on immigration, particularly its implications for employment and social cohesion.

Susan Goodwin is Associate Professor in policy studies in the Faculty of Education and Social Work at the University of Sydney. Her research focuses on gender, social policy, community capacity building and NGO social policy knowledge production.

Graeme Hugo is ARC Australian Professorial Fellow, Professor of the Discipline of Geography, Environment and Population and Director of the Australian Population and Migration Research Centre at the University of Adelaide. His research interests are in population issues in Australia and South East Asia, especially migration.

Lisel O'Dwyer is a Senior Research Associate in the Australian Population and Migration Research Centre with 20 years of research experience in both quantitative and qualitative methods. Her research interests include valuing unpaid work, the implications of population ageing for health and urban planning, geographic aspects of health conditions and outcomes and relationships between obesity and pet ownership in baby boomers.

Jenny Povey is a research psychologist at the Institute for Social Science Research of the University of Queensland for academic, commercial, and public sector clients across broad, multidisciplinary activities. She has experience in test construction, survey development, and evaluative research.

Nicholas Procter is Professor and Chair of Mental Health Nursing at the University of South Australia. He has longstanding interests in refugee and asylum seeker vulnerability.

Sophia Rainbird is a Senior Research Fellow at the Appleton Institute at CQUniversity in Adelaide. She is an anthropologist specialising in research on immigration, particularly working with refugee communities.

Bianca Sebben is a research assistant and PhD Candidate at the University of South Australia.

Kirrilly Thompson is a Senior Research Fellow at the Appleton Institute at CQUniversity in Adelaide. She is an anthropologist specialising in qualitative research on relationships in complex environments, risk and risk management.

Wojtek Tomaszewski is a Research Fellow at the Institute for Social Science Research of the University of Queensland. His expertise is in quantitative research methods, statistical analysis of complex data, and in research on poverty, social exclusion, housing, homelessness and ageing.

Graeme Tucker is a research statistician in the Epidemiology Branch of the South Australian Health Department where he provides statistical and consultancy services to the Department of Health and other government agencies. Graeme also provides statistical services in the private sector.

Archana Preeti Voola is a PhD candidate in policy studies in the Faculty of Education and Social Work at the University of Sydney. Her primary research interests are in the area of gender based inequalities, social policy, third sector studies, social innovation and critical comparative research.

Steve Whetton is the Deputy Director of the SA Centre for Economic Studies, where he has worked as a senior economist for nine years. His expertise is in complex economic modelling.