AUSTRALIAN JOURNAL OF SOCIAL ISSUES

VOLUME 50 NUMBER 3 – 2015

VOLUME 50 NUMBER 3 – 2015

The AUSTRALIAN JOURNAL OF SOCIAL ISSUES is published by the Australian Social Policy Association to provide an inter-disciplinary forum for debate on significant social policy issues. It deals with questions of social justice and social policy. Articles discuss particular social issues, review conceptual problems, present empirical studies and debate policy alternatives. The journal is editorially independent of the Association and the universities to which editors and contributors are affiliated.

AUSTRALIAN SOCIAL POLICY ASSOCIATION

The Australian Social Policy Association (ASPA) is a non-profit organisation and professional association of social policy researchers, educators, practitioners and policy-makers. ASPA promotes debate and increased understanding of social policy in Australia, and productive collaborations between those working and researching in social policy locally, across the Asia-Pacific region and internationally.

The Association's key objectives are to:

- support and foster research, practice and education in social policy in the university, non-government and government sectors,
- create a forum for the exchange of information and ideas about social policy in national and international contexts,
- facilitate and encourage higher degree research training in social policy,
- establish links with other Australian and international organisations that have an interest in social policy issues.

The Association provides its members with access to:

- publications,
- seminars,
- workshops and conferences,
- cross-sectoral networking opportunities,
- higher degree research forums and networks.

ASPA seeks to support the community of social policy researchers and policy makers in their efforts to understand and contribute to the promotion of human well-being.

Information about authors

Andreas Cebulla is a Senior Research Fellow at the National Institute of Labour Studies. He previously worked as a researcher in the UK, where he retains a Visiting Research Fellowship at the National Institute of Economic and Social Research. He has a background in urban and community research, labour market analysis, risk research, and policy evaluation.

Rachel Feeney is a Research Officer in the School of Nursing, Midwifery and Social Work at the University of Queensland. Rachel has a clinical and research background in speech pathology. Her research experience is primarily in multidisciplinary health research and program evaluation.

Rodney Fopp is a Senior Lecturer in sociology at the University of South Australia, Magill Campus. His academic interests include social theory, political philosophy, the sociology and philosophy of science and social science, religion, cross-cultural understanding, and policies about housing and homelessness.

Michele Foster is Associate Professor of Social Work at the University of Queensland. Her research focuses on applied health policy and health services research, particularly in the operation of primary health care and the provision of lifetime care for adults with acquired disabilities.

Ian Goodwin-Smith is the Director of the Australian Centre for Community Services Research at Flinders University. He has nested research interests in social theory, social policy, and social services, all of which exist within an overall concern for social justice and social inclusion. His work spans theoretical and empirical investigations, and is always attached to an inclusive political purpose and a core principle of equity.

Paul Henman is Associate Professor of Sociology and Social Policy at the University of Queensland. His research focuses on the nexus between policy, public administration, and digital technologies.

Jennifer Mays (PhD QUT, Health) is a Lecturer at the School of Public Health and Social Work, Queensland University of Technology. She has extensive work experience in the disability and human services sectors. Her research interests cover disability social policy, income support, historical-comparative policy analysis, poverty and disability rights, and gender, culture and disability interactions. Jenni is currently involved in research projects centring on the life stories of women with a disability and an evaluation project on pathways out of poverty.

Bryan Rodgers is Professor of Family Health & Wellbeing at the Australian Demographic and Social Research Institute, Australian National University. He has authored over 200 publications. His research interests include: the epidemiology of common mental disorders, substance use and gambling; childhood predictors of adult mental health; the interaction between family relationships and mental health; and interventions to prevent mental health problems and minimise their impact on social and economic functioning. He is also an advisor to the Longitudinal Study of Australian Children.

Linda Rosenman is an Emeritus Professor at UQ and Victoria University, Melbourne. Her research is on ageing and the economy, including retirement and retirement incomes, financial abuse and the economics of caring, and inheritance and intergenerational transmission of wealth.

Bruce Smyth is an Associate Professor at the Australian Demographic and Social Research Institute, Australian National University, and an Australian Research Council Future Fellow. He is currently exploring the high conflict post-divorce shared-time family. He has published widely in the area of post-separation parenting, and is on the editorial boards of Family Court Review, Journal of Family Studies, Australian Journal of Family Law, and Family Law Review.

Vu Son is a Data Analyst at the Australian Demographic and Social Research Institute, Australian National University. He completed his PhD in economics at the Crawford School of Public Policy (ANU) in 2010. His thesis examined poverty and household economic behaviour in Vietnam from 1993 to 2004. His research interests include: labour and demographic economics; health economics; and poverty and inequality. He is currently involved in the Transition to Adulthood in Indonesia study.

Cheryl Tilse is an Associate Professor in the School of Nursing, Midwifery and Social Work at the University of Queensland. Her areas of research are in assets and ageing, intergenerational transfers, later life planning, substitute and supported decision-making, and end-of-life decision-making.

Maria Vnuk is a Doctoral Candidate at the Australian Demographic and Social Research Institute, Australian National University. Until recently she worked in the Child Support Policy Section of the Department of Social Services, and before this in the Child Support Agency. Her PhD examines the demography and payment dynamics of separated mothers with a child support liability. Maria's research interests include: separated families, child support, gender, research translation, and policy development and implementation.

Ben White is a Professor and Director of the Australian Centre for Health Law Research in the Faculty of Law at the Queensland University of Technology. His area of research interest is in health law, and he has published extensively in the law, policy and practice of end-of-life decision-making.

Jill Wilson is UnitingCare Professor of Social Policy and Research in the School of Nursing, Midwifery and Social Work at the University of Queensland. Her major areas of current research are in aged care, assets and ageing, and disability.
